New Dealers Seek To Kill Off The Smaller Papers

Congressional conservatives Tuesday were locked in a triple showdown fight with the left wing of the New Deal over freedom of the press and speech.

Here are developments in a swiftly moving campaign, which promises to cause one of the hottest fights that the 78th Congress—with its newly born spirit of independence—will see:

1. Members of the Senate appropriations committee prepared to consider charges by Senator Rufus C. Holman of Oregon that while drastic reductions of newsprint for magazines and newspapers is being considered, the Office of War Information is using motion pictures, and a costly, 80 page magazine, Victory, to seek a fourth term for President Roosevelt.

2. A bi-partisan group of nearly 100 members of the House announced they will confer with Donald J. Sterling, newspaper co-ordinator in the War Production Board, to seek more detailed information on charges that WPB's Office of Civilian Supply is planning a 50 percent cut in newsprint rations—a cut that would drive many newspapers out of business.

3. Representative Eugene E. Cox of Georgia announced his special House committee was completing its organization, preliminary to a searching investigation of charges that Communist influence within the Federal Communications Commission is threatening the freedom and integrity of radio, communications and the press.

Coincidentally with announcement of a second 10 percent cut of newsprint consumption by the nation's newspapers, Rep. Paul Shafer, R., Mich. declared that congressional demands for an inquiry into government attempts to throttle the press forced the administration to abandon plans for a 50 percent slash.

This reduction, on top of a 10 percent cut imposed for the first quarter of this year, will make a total slash for each newspaper of approximately 20 percent below the 1941 level.

It was learned that the new 10 percent cut, which will be ordered by the war production board for the three months starting April 1, is only one fourth the reduction demanded by Joseph L. Weiner, Russian born immigrant who heads the WPB office of civilian supply.

Weiner, who fathered a 77 percent reduction in farm machinery output and other curtailments, demanded a new slash of 40 percent in newsprint consumption. This would have been in addition to the 10 percent cut imposed for the first quarter of 1943.

Rep. Shafer, who is a member of a special house committee which met to press for an investigation into Weiner's proposal, declared that the drastic demand was a move by "long haired government theorists to control the press by whatever methods possible." It was said that Weiner's proposal has the support of New Deal officials.

A pending resolution authored by Rep. Halleck calling for an inquiry by the house interstate and foreign commerce committee asserts that government agencies contemplate a mandatory substitution of government labels for trade names on consumer commodities.

"The proposal is favored by some theorists with a contention that advertising is an economic waste," Halleck said. "They discount the fact that advertising is responsible for America's high standard of living, that it has made possible mass production benefiting everyone, and that it is the housewife's guide to intelligent marketing."

"Other long hairs" favor this proposal because it would bring the publishers of small newspapers to their knees asking for government subsidies, and government subsidies mean government control of the press.

Publication of the government's new overseas magazine, "Victory," was attacked as criminal in the house by Rep. John Taber (R. N.Y.). Taber charged that shipping space needed for bombs and bullets is being wasted to transport the magazine, and that the taxpayers are footing the bill.

Taber protested the shipping of rected against the magazine in two days on Capitol Hill. Sen. Rufus C. Holman (R. Ore. told the senate Monday that the publication is a new federal venture in personal propaganda, designed for the promotion of a fourth term for President Roosevelt by appeals to overseas troops. Holman read the senate excerpts which he characterized as glowing tributes to Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Sponsors of the magazine, published by the office of war information, assert it is intended for distribution among the civilian populations of foreign countries. Elmer Davis, OWI director, disclosed recently that 5,000 copies were sent to American soldiers in England.

"I think this activity is criminal," Taber said, "and I don't mean to say that it borders on that. It is clearly over the line."

"It is placing the government in the publishing business, where they

MOKENA RED CROSS WORK ROOMS MOVED

The Mokena Red Cross work rooms moved this week from the Hensel Bldg. where they have been since last fall, to the Sippel Bldg. The need for larger space made the move necessary and thru the kindness of Mrs. Elmer Sippel space in her vacant store was gladly given, until such time as other disposition might be made of this store.

The Red Cross officers and workers are very grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Hensel for their kindness in giving the room in their building for these many months.

TO HOLD CARD PARTY

The Auxiliary of the VFW Mokena will hold a Card and Luncheon party at Hatch hall, Mokena, Friday Feb. 26. All games will start promptly at 8 o'clock.

are soliciting advertising at the rate of $3,000 a page from the companies having war contracts and which have no other way to pay for the advertising except to charge it back to the government in the cost of the products they sell the government. It is Mr. Taxpayer who is footing the bill.

"The magazine, exclusive of any wrappings or container, weighs exactly 13 ounces. This means the first two issues, totaling 990,000 copies, will rob us of 402 tons of shipping space which might better be filled with bombs or bullets for our enemies."

Taber protested the shipping of what he termed such foolish publications as Victory when shipping space is denied for cigarettes, candy, and home town papers wanted by the soldiers.

"I wonder," he said, "how long it will take this administration to wake up to the fact that a war is going on and that we are up to our necks in a fight for survival."

OWI authorities have thus far not disclosed the cost of publishing the 80 page magazine which is printed on high grade paper while paper for other publications is being cut down. Taber mentioned the difficulty in obtaining paper, and the other shortages, and added:

"I only wish we were not so short of brains in the OWI."

Frankfort Church Scene of A Military Wedding

St. Peter's Evang. church Frankfort, was the scene of an impressive wedding ceremony Saturday afternoon when Miss Shirley Schmuhl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Schmuhl of Frankfort, became the bride of Corp. Arthur Kampe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Kampe. The Rev. F. L. Treskow of St. Paul's Evang. Lutheran church of Sedan Prairie officiated.

Mrs. Fred Klepper, aunt of the bride, presided at the organ and accompanied Arthur Lambrecht who sang "I Love You Truly" and "O Promise Me". Candles were lighted by Corp. Raymond E. Stoeckman of Davis-Monthan Field, Tuscon, Ariz., and Pfc. Fred Meyer of the Ordnance Section of the Air Corps of Chicago.

While the organist played Wagner's Overture from Lohengrin, the four bridesmaids and their escorts, the matron of honor, the flower girl and ring bearer took their places before the chancel, preceding the bride who entered on the arm of her father. The bridegroom met her at the altar where vows were read and rings exchanged beneath an arch entwined with smilax and banked on either side with vases of roses.

The bride wore a princess style gown of white satin, fashioned with a sweetheart neckline, fitted sleeves and a long train. The full length lace bordered net veil was held in place with a halo of the same material trimmed with seed pearls. Her only ornament was a gold locket, a gift of the bridegroom. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies. Mrs. Harold Ullrich, attended her sister as matron of honor. She also wore white satin, a tiara made of gold sequins, and carried a colonial bouquet of blue carnations tied with red satin.

Two of the bridesmaids, Miss Mildred Dralle and Miss Ruth Jensen, both of Mokena, wore blue taffeta gowns with full skirts and puffed sleeves. They carried red carnations tied with white ribbons. The other bridesmaids, Miss Helen Feigel of Sedan Prairie and Miss Marjorie Schmuhl of New Lenox wore red taffeta and carried white carnations tied with blue. All wore hair ornaments to match their dresses. Their escorts were Wm. Breidert, Irvin Marquart, Elmer Feigel and Howard Kline.

George Kampe attended his brother as best man. Carol Lou Ullrich, the flower girl, wore a floor length frock of white satin, and her sister, Catherine Ann acted as ring bearer, and was attired in a "Soldier uniform."

Ushers were Gordon Spiess of Mokena and Donald Schroeder. In keeping with the military atmosphere, "America the Beautiful" was used for the recessional.

After the ceremony about 75 guests attended the reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Kline where a two course dinner was served. Appointments at the bridal table carried out a patriotic theme and a miniature bride and soldier topped the three tiered wedding cake which formed the centerpiece. Later a dance was given at the Frankfort school gym. Corp. and Mrs. Kampe left Wednesday for Missouri where he is stationed with the Headquarters Company of the ERTC at Ft. Leonard Wood.

RETURNS FROM HOSPITAL

Mrs. Len Anderson and son Dale Leonard returned to their home in New Lenox Thursday from the Silver Cross hospital. Both mother and son are doing fine.

Friends Help Tinley Couple Observe Golden Wedding

Feb. 9, 1943 marked the 50th Anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brandau of Tinley Park. Most of the relatives and many, many friends met at the Methodist church parlors in Tinley to help celebrate this golden wedding anniversary. The front platform, where Mr. and Mrs. Brandau sat to greet relatives and friends, was literally banked with flowers and plants of all kinds. The family dinner was held after the afternoon open house and in the evening at 7:00 pm there was open house again for everyone desiring to come and wish them well.

There were about 300 relatives and friends present who registered in an album used for guests at the wedding on Feb. 9, 1893. There were 17 of the original wedding guests present at the Golden Wedding celebration. A very nice program was arranged which everyone thoroughly enjoyed. After the program all were invited to partake of refreshments which among other things included a piece of the three tier Golden Wedding Cake.

Mr. and Mrs. Brandau wish to thank all their relatives and friends for all the lovely cards, gifts and flowers sent to them on this happy occasion.

FRANKFORT BOARD APPROVES LEAD TO REPLACE COPPER

The Frankfort Village Board at a special meeting Wednesday approved the substitution of lead in place of copper for piping leading from the village water mains into residences. The Board approved a price of $60 for lead piping from the Village water main to the consumer's meter.

As quite a number of homes in the village are to be or are being remodeled the Board agreed to the substitution inasmuch as copper is off the market.

BROKEN FLANGE IMPERILS TRAIN OF OIL

The watchfulness of the tower man at the "J" Tower in east Joliet prevented a serious train wreck on the Rock Island Tuesday forenoon. As a Rock Island east bound freight train was passing over the "J" tracks he discovered something dragging. Upon reaching the Rock Island land tracks he found pieces of a car wheel flange scattered along the right of way. He called Whitney Carter, the Rock Island agent at Mokena, who set the signal for slow speed and when the train arrived at Mokena it was stopped and upon further investigation it was found that a wheel on one of the trucks of a loaded oil car had a broken flange. The car was set out and a new wheel ordered from the shops. Had the oil car been derailed a serious wreck might have resulted as there were 40 cars of oil in the train.

Classes For Farmers Thruout Will Co., To Be Started

Classes for farmers thruout Will County will be started in the near future to help them increase their war production of swine, beef, poultry, dairy products, soy beans and corn. Taught by farmers who have specialized in the various fields, the classes will be held in the country schools and may be attended by farmers from either the local or neighboring school districts. In order to have a course at least 10 men or women must enroll.

All courses will follow the outline suggested by the state department of vocational education. The teachers will receive special training in their subjects before the classes begin although they have specialized in them for several years.

Sponsored by the state department of vocational education, the course instructors will be selected to handle the classes in their own territory.

All the courses will begin within the next two weeks. A list of teachers, the subjects they will teach and the schools in which the classes will be held will be listed in the near future.

Those wishing to enroll are urged to call E. W. Rowley at the Joliet Township High School or the instructor of the class in which interested.

Two classes in farm machinery repair have been started recently, and another is being organized to begin soon. Those started a short time ago and still open for enrollment are at the Joliet Implement Company and the Bechtel Implement Company in Tinley Park. The third class to begin soon will be held at the Davis Implement company in Elwood. Those wishing to enroll may call these places for information.

Next week two classes will begin in the New Lenox grade school. They will deal with poultry production, taught by Myron McKiernan of Joliet, and swine production taught by John E. Francis of New Lenox. These start at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, Feb. 18. All who are interested are urged to be present. Enrollment may be made by contacting the teachers before hand, as enrollment may be limited, or by calling E. W. Rowley at the Joliet Township high school.

Soybeans Deplete Land's Nitrogen

Fertilizing, Rotation Counteracts Losses

How to fertilize soybeans is a question that faces hundreds of thousands of farmers since the war's demands have so greatly increased the production of this crop.

When soybeans are grown for hay or grain, they are definitely a soil-depleting crop, according to R. E. Yoder, chief agronomist, Ohio Agricultural Experiment station.

Results of tests covering 22 years at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station revealed that a 25-bushel-per-acre soybean crop removed 25 pounds of phosphorus and 30 pounds of potash per acre from the soil.

Hereford cattle in a Midland, Texas, corral waiting for shipment to eastern packing houses.

In other words, soybean grain removed 1½ times as much phosphorus and twice as much potash as did corn grain from the soil.

In spite of the fact that the soybean is a legume, it breaks down soil organic matter and depletes the land's nitrogen supply even in generously fertilized rotations at rates almost identical with those caused by clean-cultivated row crops.

Obviously the nitrogen fixed by the plant is transformed into protein in the beans removed from the soil. Soybeans leave behind in the soil only half as much root residue as corn grown on the same land. The haulm is likewise high in a carbon residue similar to that of any other straw.

Farmers should offset the degrading effects of the bean's on the soil's fertility by means of soil building practices.

Soybeans should be fertilized. Experiments thus far have failed to show that soybeans respond to direct fertilization.

The first step in fertilizing soybeans is to be sure the land is generously supplied with active calcium and lime. Next increase the rate of fertilizer application to wheat, corn and other crops grown in rotation. Soybeans should be confined to the most fertile fields on the farm, so that production goals may be attained on the smallest possible acreage of land. They should be planted on the most level fields to minimize erosion and wherever possible on the contour.

In fitting soybeans into a rotation system, it is always best to substitute this crop for one of the other row crops or small grains. Soybeans should never be substituted for soil-building sod crops.

Up in Smoke

Burning of pastures and meadows costs farmers millions of dollars each year in soil losses and decreased yields of grasses. Experiments in Kansas show that the yield of blue-stem grasses was cut 48 to 88 percent depending on the time of burning. Fall burning was most injurious. Oklahoma tests show that where wooded pasture was burned the runoff was 28 times as great and soil loss 12 times as great as for areas not burned.

CROWN PRINCESS MARTHA

The crown princess of Norway is now a full-fledged member of the "Short-Snorters Club," with such other distinguished personages as Winston Churchill and Henry A. Wallace.

It happened as the Princess Martha was returning by clipper from England to her home in Maryland. The stewardess on the plane asked if she were a member of the club, which requires every member to carry a marked $1 bill as a certificate of membership. She was not. Whereupon other passengers promptly presented their dollar bills—token of membership in the club—for the princess to sign.

She wrote her name in ink, "Martha, Crown Princess of Norway," across a dozen dollar bills that day, as the plane soared over the Atlantic. There were 14 passengers, and she signed for all except her lady-in-waiting, Ragni Ostgaard.

The plane had been some time out of England before the passengers realized they had a princess aboard. She appeared on the passenger list simply as "Mrs. Brown." But someone recognized her from pictures, and the word got around.

While most of the passengers played bridge, the princess read a book. At night she tucked herself into the little sleeping compartment, lower berth, while the lady-in-waiting climbed into the upper.

She chatted with passengers as if she were merely Mrs. Brown, and when the trip was over, passenger Fred Williams of the British air ministry remarked:

"She's quite the most charming lady I've ever met."

HURLEY AND TIMOSHENKO

When friends asked Brig. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, just back from Russia, to explain the Marshal Timoshenko's mysterious disappearance from the limelight, Hurley dodged the question as follows:

Timoshenko is the George Washington of Russia. Washington retreated all the way from Boston to Yorktown. He lost one battle after another, but he figured that as long as he had his army intact, and the vast reaches of North America to retreat into, he might lose the battles but he would win the war.

And he kept on retreating until he was able to spring the trap on Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Timoshenko also followed the retreat strategy—from Kharkov to Rostov to Stalingrad—but kept his army intact. He is a tremendous figure in Russia. His name is stamped on the hearts of the people.

(Editor's Note: Marshal Timoshenko is now on the northern Leningrad front, it has been disclosed. A letter to Stalin from commanders on that front was headed by Timoshenko's name.)

LATINS LOVE RUSSIA

Latin American fear of Communism has long kept those countries from recognizing the Soviet Union. But Soviet military successes have persuaded the Latins that the Soviets will emerge among the victors in this war and will be a power to deal with.

Thus some of the countries below the Rio Grande are coming around to diplomatic recognition of the Soviet government.

Cuba is sending Dr. Aurelio Conchoso, ambassador to Washington, to Moscow to open a legation, which will later be in charge of Dr. Raoul Herrera-Arango, also from the Washington embassy.

Mexico is sending her minister counselor from the Washington embassy, Dr. Luis Quintanilla, to become minister to the U. S. S. R.

Foreign Ministers Gabriel Turbay of Colombia and Alberto Guani of Uruguay are in Washington today, where they will discuss with Soviet Ambassador Litvinov the establishment of missions in Russia. Colombia recognized the Soviet in 1936, but has never sent a minister.

It's also reported that Ecuador and Venezuela plan similar action. Thus far, however, Colombia is the only country on the South American continent which has recognized the Soviet Union.

There are substantial possibilities for trade between Russia and Latin America after the war, and some of the Latins are getting on the band wagon.

Note: Argentina, the only Latin American country not to break with the Axis, is scared sick over the prospect of a Russian victory and the danger of communism.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Spanish pressure on Paramount will cause some changes in the movie version of Hemingway's best seller "For Whom the Bell Tolls," but it will probably be released to the American public in April—despite Franco.

U. S. Chamber of Commerce President Eric Johnston will run for the senate in 1944 on the Republican ticket against Senator Homer Bone, Democrat. Johnston is one of the few politically minded men ever to sit in the crusty throne of the U. S. chamber.

Many medicinal purges work on you—by prodding the intestines into action or drawing water into them from other parts of the body.

But KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN—crisp, delicious breakfast cereal—works mainly on the contents of your colon. If you have normal intestines and your constipation is due to lack of "bulk" in your diet, you'll find ALL-BRAN a much gentler way to treat it.

Eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly and drink plenty of water—and you'll find wonderful relief. For this way, ALL-BRAN gets at the cause of constipation due to lack of "bulk" and corrects it. ALL-BRAN is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek and sold by your grocer. Try it!

Cow's Grave on Map

The only animal whose grave has ever been designated on the map of its country is Buzoe, a pet cow that died of old age in the Gibson desert of Australia in 1876 while she was with a party mapping the territory, says Collier's. "Buzoe's Grave" was indicated on the original chart and, consequently, the place was included on many maps of Australia published in the past 60 years.

Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling, feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

W-N-U RELEASE

THE STORY SO FAR: Judy Jason, who is telling the story, receives an anonymous letter enclosing $500 and asking her to bid for an abandoned church to be auctioned the next day. She suspects, in turn, each of the guests at the inn where she is staying. They are the Reverend Jonas DeWitt, Lily Kendall, Thaddeus Quincy, Albion Potter, Hugh Norcross and his sister, Bessie, and Victor Quade, a writer who has just arrived. Judy bids for the church and gets it. The body of a man identified as Roddy Lane, found in a chest in the basement of the church, disappears. Later, Victor Quade tells Judy that he found a golf club near the chest.

Now continue with Judy's story.

CHAPTER VI

Toward dawn the shed was just a sputtering heap of cinders. And what would they find? What would they find?

We were all running around trying to help. I'd encountered, as I remembered afterward, everybody except Uncle Wylie, still sleeping it off in his room, and, of course, Thaddeus Quincy, wrapped in a blanket, watching the fire from his chair. He'd managed to wheel himself onto the porch. But none of us had found a trace of Old Man Brown until my foot slipped.

Ugh! I can feel it now—like a bony snake. It threw me off balance so that I barged into the Reverend's stomach, and he let out a word which any editor would most certainly delete. I picked up the thing which had tripped me to discover it was a large, old-fashioned ear trumpet—the kind you used to see years ago, in plays, when a deaf person would hold one up to your nose and shout "Hey?" Well, poor old Mr. Brown would never again use this one. I took it at once to Victor.

"Add to unsolved mystery: One trumpet, saved by person who couldn't save himself. Threw it out of the window, didn't he, maybe?" "Maybe. You say this Brown was stone deaf? Very interesting. Very."

"Well, one thing's sure. It proves he's dead. Otherwise he'd be clinging to it."

"Oh, yes! Never talked in it myself, but my husband has," said Aunt Nella.

"Mrs. Gerry, what time does your milkman arrive? Any earlier holidays?"

"Later. But we've enough cream saved for breakfast. Around noon. The Head's the last place he calls."

Victor sighed. "Hear that, folks? Doesn't that beat the dickens? We've had an explosion nobody heard at the bridge. Nobody from Rockville, I mean. Another, followed by a fire nobody saw. Now we've got to wait till 12 o'clock before the milkman can get here."

"We could meet him," Potter suggested.

"We'll appoint a committee," boomed De Witt.

"Well, there's certainly nothing more to do here. The trees are safe. The fire's over. Why don't we go back and get dressed and have some toast and coffee, if Mrs. Gerry can manage it? Perhaps some of you ladies—"

"Of course, we will," my aunt and Lily both cried.

"Me, too," added Bessie Norcross.

"Come along, Hugh."

I waited for Victor, who told me to go with the others. He'd be along pretty soon. He was leaning over the hot embers, searching with the flashlight I'd given him.

Victor Quade called me back. "Judy"—even he was calling me by my first name now, common danger having bred familiarity. I loved it—"does your Uncle Wylie smoke a pipe?"

Did Uncle Wylie smoke a pipe? Why, one never saw him without it—a smudged little old briar that smelled to heaven.

"Yes; why?" "Keep it under your hat. Take a squint at this."

I took a squint in the faint morning light. Looked like my uncle's pipe, all right.

"But, good land, Mr. Quade, that was hours ago—if he dropped it."

"Exactly. Maybe he didn't drop it. If I'd found it written in one of my books I'd say it was a plant."

"In one of your books? But I thought you were just beginning to write. You said—"

"Come along, Judy. We might as well have coffee, too." He smiled down at me rather grimly. I thought, "Don't give me away, will you? Quade is my real name. If I told you my pen name you'd see me mobbed with pink teas and autograph hounds. I needed a rest—to get away from all that. No one ever heard of Victor Quade. I may have to tell them myself. That Quincy fellow suspects me."

I couldn't speak. One second I puffed with pride to be in the confidence of an author famous enough to be mobbed; the next, my hopes fell. I mustn't let myself like him. He'd never give me a thought. Probably he was married anyway. Astonishingly, I heard myself say, "Lucky you didn't bring Mrs. Quade."

"Mother? She'd never ride with a trailer. Or did you mean—? Why, you artful little devil. Just like that! And I've spent years wondering how to do that little thing on my typewriter. Judy Jason, you're going to be a great help to me."

I felt all happy again. Nothing pleases a woman so much as to be told she's a help.

I ran on ahead to help Aunt Nella. She was the quickest thing you ever saw in her kitchen. Already coffee was percolating. Lily Kendall was turning toast. She'd poured too much cream into the cups. I halved it from cup to cup and set her to getting plates and spoons.

Such a hubbub in that dining room! Auntie and I decided we might as well boil eggs, too, and let them fix their own oranges. If we didn't we'd just have to give them a regular breakfast in an hour. Murder and explosions and fires can work up awful appetites. The Rev. Mr. De Witt consumed five three-minute eggs!

"Give 'em all they want," Aunt Nella said. "They'll be leavin' soon." Auntie hadn't stopped to change her clothes. She looked like the Witch of Endor. I told her she'd better fly, because when the police came all our pictures might get into the Rockville Gazette. She just sat at the kitchen table, weeping into her coffee. If Wylie's pipe had set the fire she didn't care what happened, she said. It wasn't in his pocket when she undressed him.

I hadn't mentioned the finding of that pipe. But it wasn't on the kitchen shelf where he always put it at night, just before going to bed.

Though it made more work for me, I was glad our high schooler had gone home right after doing the dishes last night. At least she was out of this mess. I carried in Mr. Quincy's cereal, soaked with hot milk, as he liked it.

"—killed Roddy Lane, burned his house and jumped into the sea," Hugh Norcross was saying.

"You've got it twisted, my boy," boomed the minister. "Roddy killed

Bessie Norcross stood clinging to the porch rail.

Brown, more likely. The fire was his funeral pyre. Then Lane disappeared from the Head."

Lily giggled, twiddling a string of pearls. "How, please? I didn't hear no airplane."

Thaddeus Quincy thumped his cane. "Listen, folks. This is a lot of fun, I know, conjecturing about murders. But you're all wrong. The whole business is a series of odd coincidences. Very odd. First, Judy has the jitters and imagines she sees something. Well, we proved there was nothing there, didn't we? Then the bridge broke down at the same time a car backed, and we assumed it was blown up. I'll wager the police won't think so. Next that fish shed burns. Spontaneous combustion, probably. Place wasn't fit to live in anyway. Just a shack full of tar paper and oily ropes and old tarpaulin. A wonder anyone would sleep in the dump, but someone did. Judy and I saw the light through the one window. Couldn't see in. Too dirty and cobwebby. Had a paper curtain over it, too, didn't it, Judy? I just remember slits of light." I nodded and he continued, "Old man may have been smoking. But it was an accident, pure and simple. Lane didn't kill anybody. He's a mean skunk, but he's far away by now. As to how, Miss Kendall, he came in a car and left the same way."

Victor Quade stood up and Mr. Quincy stopped abruptly. "You're wrong, too, unfortunately," Victor said quietly. "Lane's car is still in the castle garage. It's now," he glanced at his watch, "not quite 5. Mrs. Gerry says the Head is the last place on the trade people's route. Milk not until noon. Being a holiday, there'll be no mail. Market man tomorrow. You can see we have quite a little time before the first person along that empty stretch of road you call the Neck discovers the broken bridge and summons aid. Funny Rockville didn't see the fire, but remember the fog was mighty dense and we project nearly five miles out to sea. Take it for a bonfire to honor the Fourth if they chanced to see it."

"So what?" Bessie interrupted.

"Just this, my friends. Your Roddy Lane did not leave the Head. His car is still in the garage. Saw it last night when we searched. I had the flashlight. It's my belief Judy was right, but now it's daylight and I propose further search."

"Mr. De Witt and Mr. Potter, you take another look in the garage. See if you can get into the Lane castle. Break a window if necessary. Here are the keys to my trailer. Scout around. But especially scan the rocks."

Bessie began to cry, and Hugh said resentfully: "I think you might consider the ladies. My sister—"

"Of course. You girls help Mrs. Gerry. Poor woman, she needs it."

Bessie left the room, but Lily and I sat tight, while Victor continued his directions. Lily begged to be allowed to join the hunt.

"All right, Miss Kendall, you and Mr. Hugh What's-your-name, take the church end and the woods. Scour the shore. Yours is the quieter side toward the cove. You might find something. Anyway, if Brown or Lane is in those woods, come quietly back. The Head is so tiny you all ought to search it in no time. But don't touch anything you may find. I wouldn't go into the church basement again till the police come."

Mr. Quincy folded his hands, his lips working pitifully. I could have squeezed Victor when he said, "Quincy and I will look at the fire ruins." And he seized the invalid's chair, while I ran to hold open the door.

I didn't like to be left behind, but they'd virtually dismissed me, so I had no choice. Anyway, they'd soon be back. I fixed a tray for Uncle Wylie, which Aunt Nella took up. Bessie wiped and I washed the dishes. Every other minute one of us would race to the door, and as soon as we were through I ran down to where the other men were gradually collecting around the ruins of the fish shed.

Bessie Norcross stood clinging to the porch rail. She wouldn't budge till her brother came for her, she said. And of course my aunt and uncle were in their room at the time.

"Don't come any closer," Victor cautioned. "Don't touch a thing."

"Glory be—they've found something. Ain't it excitin'?" Lily burst her pearls down poor Mr. Q's neck as he leaned forward, pointing with his cane.

"See it? That, girls and boys," Thaddeus shouted, "is the corpus delicti, without which there can be no murder. Now all we need is to find out if it's Brown or Lane."

"Or both of them," Potter said, shuddering.

"You girls go back," Victor said, taking the shawl Mr. Q. handed him from his shoulders and covering the charred torso lying in the midst of ashes and debris. I won't describe it here; it's too horrible. I'd never before seen a body burned and blackened beyond recognition. What little there was left might have been anybody. Could experts tell whether the remains were of an old man or a middle-aged? I wondered.

"Of course it was Old Man Brown," Mr. Q. said, "or we'd have found Lane's diamond ring. Diamonds will burn under pressure, being allotropic forms of carbon, but not in a fire like this. Well, there wasn't any ring we could find, was there, Quade?"

"No, only don't tell the police we poked."

"That leaves us just where we were before," Lily Kendall said. "Mr. Norcross and I didn't see anybody in the woods."

Hugh agreed, "That's right. Lane skipped, and this was an accident. How do you know Lane didn't walk to town?"

"Bless you, I don't. He may have," Victor agreed. "But it is logical to suppose he did—a man with a car?"

"And the car's still over there," the minister thundered. "Strange. Passing strange."

"There wasn't a thing wrong with the trailer," Albion Potter added. "Did you go into the castle?"

"No, we didn't," De Witt said. "Breaking and entering—I thought we'd better wait for the police. But Potter here shinned up on to a balcony and saw that one room had been used all right. Suitcase on the bed wasn't there, Potter, and clothes strewn about?"

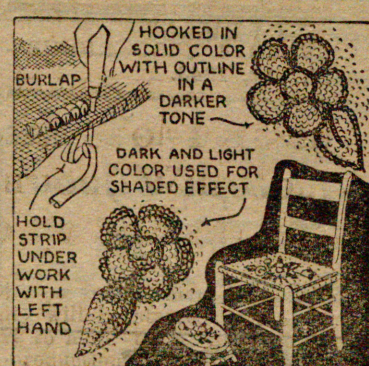

Albion nodded. "Couldn't see much, but the bed didn't look as if it had been slept in."

"A man's clothes? You—you couldn't be sure they were Lane's?"

"How could I? But a man's, all right. Helter-skelter, pajamas, shirts, tumbled out of an open suitcase."

"It's beginning to make sense, Victor Quade said. "How about it, you people? We can do a lot to clear up this business for the police, and the more we find out the more we'll be saved afterward. What do you say we take a good look at the bridge first, post a sentry in case anybody should happen along the Neck bright and early, and then have a general co-operative get-together and clear up what we can?"

YOUR rag bag contains the best possible material for making attractive pads for chairs and foot stools. These may be hooked in the same manner as rugs are made. Cut or tear old materials into strips and draw loops through either burlap or canvas with a rug hook as shown at the left. Either cotton, wool, silk or rayon may be used. The strips may be cut from three quarters to one and one-half inches wide, according to the weight of the material and how fine you wish the work to be. If some color is desired that you do not have on hand goods should be dyed to carry out your room color scheme.

You will find it easy to outline a simple flower design with wax crayon. Many people do successful hooking without a frame. Small pieces of work may be stretched over an old picture frame and thumb-tacked. Flowers and leaves may be hooked in outline as at the upper right, or two or more tones may be used for a shaded effect, as at the lower right.

NOTE: BOOK 5, of the series of home-making booklets prepared for readers, contains directions for making your own flower designs and for hooking rugs. BOOK 6 contains directions for a hooked, a braided and a crocheted rug all made from old clothing. Copies are 10 cents each. Send requests for booklets direct to:

40-Inch Rain in Day

In May of last year we heard of the monsoon in Assam, topping the Japanese advance, and many newspapers spoke of Cherrapunji, in that state, as the wettest place in the world. Well, Cherrapunji is certainly moist. For 40 years its average rainfall has been 426 inches for each 12 months. Once there were 30 inches a day for 5 days on end, and 40 inches fell in one day on June 11, 1873.

Yet Cherrapunji is not the wettest place on our planet. That distinction belongs to Waialeale, in the island of Kanai, Hawaii. During five successive years the annual rainfall here was no less than 518 inches.

HOUSEHOLD

Pipe cleaners are handy in the kitchen to clean gas burners, lemonade sippers, funnels, etc.

Keep leftover pancake batter and thicken it with flour for muffins. If it is kept several days, add one-half teaspoon of soda for each cup of batter.

Left-over meat, minced, with cream or salad dressing makes a popular sandwich filling.

To take black stains out of a hardwood floor, scrub floor vigorously with hot water and javelle water, using a stiff brush. For persistent stains repeat process.

Egg stains on table linen should be soaked with cold water, as warm water sets them.

Place a rubber mat on the saucer under your potted plant and it will absorb the right amount of moisture from the mat.

A teaspoonful of pulverized alum added to stove blacking will give the stove a brilliant luster that will last for a long time.

If a child's birthday is forgotten till the last minute, fix a novel gift for him this way: Stick pennies, nickels or dimes into a shiny red apple, tie a ribbon bow on the blossom end, and the gift is ready.

Vegetables should be cooked whole with their skins on, rather than in slices. Cook them quickly and in a small quantity of water. Water draws from vegetables a great deal of their food value, and this food value all too often goes down the drain. Most vegetables will retain their bright color if you remember to cook them uncovered.

Mrs. Earl Martin who has been recuperating from an illness in the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Burnett the past few weeks, returned to her home in Michigan, Sunday.

Mrs. Ben D. Brankey has returned home from attending the Farm and Home Week meeting at the U. of I. at Champaign.

John Gustafson, for 24 years a resident of Homer township, passed away Saturday at Silver Cross hospital in Joliet. Mr. Gustafson suffered a paralytic stroke Thursday from which he never regained consciousness.

Mr. Gustafson was born in Sweden October 29, 1873 and came to this country when a young man. His death was indeed sudden, as he was putting his machinery and stock in readiness for a public sale on the 25th of the month, as he was planning to retire. Surviving are his wife, Anna; two daughters, Miss Lois and Mrs. Otto Nystrom of West Lockport; a son, Morris of Skokie, Ill.; two brothers, William of New York and Henry of Sweden; one sister, Mrs. Emma McCreavy of Chicago and 5 grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the Goodale Funeral Home Monday afternoon and to the Evangelical Covenant Church. The Rev. A. E. Palmquist, pastor, officiated. Burial was in the Lockport cemetery.

Homer friends were glad to hear of the safe arrival of a baby boy to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Anderson of New Lenox. Leonard was one of our Homer boys and we know he is indeed a proud papa.

The Girl's 4-H Sewing and Canning Club donated $2.00 to the Ambulance Fund, which will be given toward the purchase of an ambulance for the army.

The Homer Husky Hustlers 4-H Club will meet Friday evening in the home of Miss Shirley Dempsey.

MOKENA SERVICE CLUB NEWS

(By Mrs. Leslie G. Clark)

Mrs. Raymond McGuire will be at Mrs. Jessie Sippel's store Monday evening at 8 o'clock to start the Women's Service Club members at making dressings for the Red Cross. Everyone should wear a house dress smock or a coverall apron and bring something white to cover their hair. All the women of Mokena are asked to come and help in this very essential work.

We have received several more letters of thanks from our boys. A note from Kenneth L. Alcorn, a Marine on Midway Island in the Pacific says he is most grateful for being sent his Xmas box. He says: "We have no idea how nice it was to receive articles I could use." Pvt. Alcorn is a brother of Mrs. James C. Mullins.

"Thank you very much for the lovely Birthday gift you sent me. It was a surprise. It really makes a person feel good to know they are thought of on their birthdays and Christmas too."

—Lester Niemann.

"I wish to thank you for the nice box you sent me at Xmas. My Buddies and I enjoyed the candy and I made use of everything you sent me. At present we are on maneuvers in Arizona. The weather is pleasant and we are well fed. Out here the boys are always glad to hear from the people at home, but we don't get much chance to answer in the daylight hours. At night all we have is a candle to write by. Thank you again."

—Sherwin Liess.

Mail For the Armed Forces

The following information regarding mail for the armed forces has been received for publication:

During recent months, complaints from the public of delayed or lost mail addressed to members of the armed forces indicate that there is wide misunderstanding of how this mail is handled and of the difficulties encountered in its delivery.

These complaints, incidentally, are far fewer than the number received during the first World War although the volume of mail is much larger, according to veteran postal officials who have directed postal activities in both wars.

Mail for members of the armed forces is delivered by the Postal Service to Army and Navy authorities at post offices convenient to camps or stations in this country or to ports of embarkation when addressed to persons overseas. The Postal Service then has no further jurisdiction over the mail, and responsibility for its delivery from that point on lies entirely with the Army and Navy. Like wise, the Army and Navy handle mail from members of the armed forces until it is delivered to civilian post offices in this country, and the Postal Service has no jurisdiction over the mail until so received.

Army and Navy post offices are, technically, branches of civilian post offices in this country, but they are not under the jurisdiction of the Postal Service, being maintained and operated by the War and Navy Departments and manned by military and naval personnel. For instance, APO 1234, care postmaster, New York, N. Y. would be a branch of the New York post office, although it may be located with troops in Africa or elsewhere. Mail deposited in that post office for delivery in this country would carry the return address of "APO 1234, New York, N. Y.", although it came from abroad and the postmark on the envelope is placed thereon at the overseas location and not at New York.

Directory service, through which improperly addressed mail is read-dressed and forwarded, is provided by the Army and Navy.

Delays in the mail to the armed forces may be caused by various factors. Transportation of the mail sometimes must be postponed so that more urgent needs for arms, food, or more military and naval personnel may be filled first. Although mails are dispatched at every opportunity, at times the overburdened facilities cannot accommodate all the mail and it must be held until shipping space is available. Ships must travel in convoys, in the interest of safety, and a convoy can start only when the last ship is loaded and can travel only as fast as the slowest ship in the group—all of which consumes much time. Transfers of personnel from one point to another also add to the time required for mail to catch up with the men shifted. Censorship, which is done by the Office of Censorship or military authorities, may also cause some delay, although this is held to a minimum. The Post Office Department does not have jurisdiction over the censorship of mail.

Ship sinkings by the enemy account for much of the lost mail.

Many thousands of letters and packages have been on ships lost by enemy action.

Many postal patrons have wondered why there is more rapid and regular mail service from the armed forces overseas than to them. This is because less mail comes from overseas than goes to our armed forces overseas; ships and planes on return trips have more space available; and the location of addressees in this country is more stable than that of overseas personnel. V-mail letters are given priority in transportation by the Army and Navy over ordinary mail, and when possible are sent by plane.

Some of the public are under the misapprehension that the Post Office Department can provide the addresses and locations of soldiers, sailors and marines abroad. The Postal Service has no such records. When it is necessary to obtain such addresses of soldiers they may be had from the Office of The Adjutant General, War Department, Washington, D. C.; of sailors, from the Bureau of Naval Personnel, Navy Department, Washington; and of Marines, from the Marine Corps Headquarters, Navy Department Bldg., Washington.

Electric Power Speeds Torpedo Production in Northern Illinois

In supplying America's ships of war with thousands of torpedoes, electricity is a mighty production facility. Electricity illuminates the torpedo plant—the machines and assembly lines—it drives the lathes and drills—it runs the grinding and stamping machines—it propels the huge conveyors and giant cranes. Electricity is the power behind industrial activity—the power behind the nation's great war production program.

Dear Friends:

A few lines to let you know that I am receiving your paper regularly every week, and am always looking forward to its arrival, it always kind of makes me feel closer to home when I read it.

The army so far has treated me very nice, that is I feel good and have gained quite some weight, so thanks a lot for your paper.

Yours truly,

Cpl. John Novak, 795th Ord. L. M. Co., APO 95 Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

About Social Security Numbers

Persons not having social security account numbers should not apply for a social security card purely for income tax return purposes. G. A. McCollum, manager of the Social Security Board's field office at Joliet, Illinois advised today.

"Some people have never used a social security number," Mr. McCollum said. However, when they read the new income tax form and see that it calls for a social security number they think it necessary to apply for an account number in order to complete the income tax form.

"An account number is not necessary for income tax purposes if the person has never had one before or will not need one in the future."

Mr. McCollum said that discussions with officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue have resulted in assurance that the Bureau does not require that an account number be shown on the new income tax forms and does not desire the number unless the person has previously had one issued to him by an office of the Social Security Board. If individuals apply for an account number solely for the purpose of entering it on their income tax forms, Social Security Board officials are advising them that it is not necessary to enter a social security number in the space provided, unless the individual already has a social security card.

This does not apply to civilian employees of the War Department for whom the Bureau of Old Age and Survivors Insurance of the Social Security board has agreed to issue account numbers.

IN SPITE of our inability to provide "service as usual" under wartime conditions, our daily mailbag of thank-you letters continues to increase and criticisms continue to decrease.

Illinois Bell people are very grateful for your kind words — especially at a time when twenty-four-hour days seem all too short to take time out for letter writing.

More than 1450 of our trained men and women have joined Uncle Sam's armed forces. Our operators, repair men and others still on the job are handling heavier loads than ever before. In many cases, their work is necessarily hampered by lack of materials and equipment.

Yet the telephone tradition of Service carries on. Fast service. Friendly service. Efficient service... Telephone men and women know they are doing work vitally useful to our nation at war. They will do their best.

ORLAND PARK

Wednesday evening, Feb. 3 about 85 friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Kay, assembled in the parlors of the Methodist church to do them honor and wish them God speed on their departure for their new home in Tucson, Arizona.

The program was in charge of Mrs. H. Adele Cooper and was expressive of the love and esteem in which they are held by their friends in the community. It was featured by the singing of their favorite songs and hymns, playing of games, speeches and eulogies, and a general display of good fellowship. A special feature was the setting up of a recording outfit into which each guest in turn spoke his greetings and his farewell and which was given to the Kay's as a permanent record of the party and hear the voices of their old friends again and again in their new home. A purse was presented to them with the injunction that the amount be used to purchase some permanent article to furnish their new home to serve as a memory link with the friends left behind.

The Kay's have lived in Orland Park for many years, in fact Leonard says ever since he was born, and we know that was 54 years ago. Both have been prominent in civic, community, social and church affairs. Len has served as Alderman for several terms and many times as acting Mayor. Nina has been prominent in women's civic matters. Both have been active in church work singing in the choir and participating in the various activities of the church.

Their beautiful home, in which they took so much pride and gave so much care has been sold to Raymond Myrick. Orland regrets their leaving and wishes them the best of luck and that the climate of Arizona may bring back the health that Len is seeking. So to Len and Nina Kay, good citizens, good friends, good neighbors and good Christians, Orland Park says Goodbye and God Speed.

The first meeting of the newly formed Home Nursing Class was held in the Orland Park school Monday evening, Feb. 8 with 26 present. With Miss Rose Hoy, R.N. District The first meeting was more in the Public Health Nurse, outlining the scope and sequence of the work to be covered and listing the essential materials needed to carry on the work. There is still time to enroll as the actual instruction work does not begin until Monday. Those desiring to do so should contact Mrs. Ralph Town, Health chairman of the Orland Park PTA who will explain what to bring etc.

This course will cover a 10 week period of 2 hours instruction each week and the classes will be held every Monday at 7:30 pm. sharp in the Orland Park school. It is comprehensive enough in its scope to cover the entire field of home nursing and provide instruction to capably handle most emergency situations and thus become a valuable asset to any person who takes the course. It is open to all persons in the community without fee and every one is urged to enroll.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Rendler, who for many years have made their home in Orland Park have sold their home to Mr. and Mrs. Bob Arnold and moved to Chicago where they are making their home at 6645 So. Paulina St.

Miss Adeline Heim, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Heim of Orland Park and Harold Larimore, son of Mrs. Ruth Larimore of Orland Township were quietly married Saturday, Jan. 23rd at the Rectory of St. Michaels church. Father J. L. Rooney performed the ceremony and Lucille Lucas and Robert Schult were the attendants. They will make their home with Mr. Larimore's mother in Orland township.

Margaret Cooper, daughter of Frank and the late Elizabeth Cooper of Orland Park and Pvt. Walter H. Koehler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Koehler of Orland township stole a march on their many friends when they were married Thursday evening, Feb. 4th by the Rev. Paul Sanders of the Community Center Foundation, Palos Park. The young couple had become engaged several months ago, prior to Mr. Koehler's induction into Army service but no definite date for their marriage had been set. When Pvt. Koehler came home on a 10 day furlough last week, the young couple lost no time in securing the license and having the marriage knot tied. Their many friends in the community join in wishing them much happiness and good luck.

When Pvt. Koehler returns to his duties at the Army Air Base at Wilmington, Del. the new Mrs. Koehler will continue to live at her father's home in Orland Park and carry on her part in the War effort by keeping steadily at her job in essential war production industry.

Mrs. E. G. Forslund who has been a visitor at the home of her daughter Mrs. S. S. Knox since Nov. 24 has returned to her home in Chicago.

IF THERE has been a part of sport badly overdone, the prize goes to the length given to spring training in the major leagues.

This applies especially to the long list of exhibition games played along the route back home.

If owners and managers don't know this, the ballplayers do. Few ballplayers facing a 154-game schedule can handle 35 extra games without going stale. Two weeks' training should be plenty if the ballplayer keeps in fairly good condition through the winter.

I've heard several club owners and managers admit this, but they feel they must string along with the others, largely through alleged publicity values.

Training at home through a shorter period isn't going to hurt the quality of play.

The Case of Ty Cobb

I asked Ty Cobb one year why he had held out so long. "Money had nothing to do with it," he said. "I simply didn't want to wear myself out with too much spring training. Take my season in 1911. I held out that year and finally reported at Terre Haute on April 6. This left me about ten days to get ready. That year I batted .420 and stole 96 bases. I was still fresh and feeling good through the last week, where some of the others had gone stale."

Cobb handled fewer training days than any other big-time ballplayer.

This partly accounts for the fact that he was able to move at top speed for 24 years.

Cobb kept in condition by hunting most of the winter. His legs were always ready to give him the transportation he wanted.

If Cobb had reported late in February or early March, season after season, he would have lost at least four years from his playing time.

For Cobb only knew how to play the game one way—at top speed.

Exceptions

I'll admit, Cobb was an exception. So was Babe Ruth. One of the all-time sporting marvels is the way Babe Ruth carried his 240-pound system through 20 seasons on a brace of slender ankles.

Ty Cobb

Each year you had the feeling those thin ankle props were going to crack up, considering the fact that Ruth also averaged at least 30 exhibition games each year. The Babe weighed 253 pounds the year he collected his 60 home runs, from 15 to 20 pounds over his normal displacement.

"I had enough left that year to hit 'em a little harder," the Babe tells you. And he also feels certain he could have added a husky batch of extra homers if he hadn't been called on for so much exhibition play.

It has always been my belief that major league seasons start too early and last too long.

The season should be condensed, adding the necessary doubleheaders to fill out.

In Shape

There is no reason why a ball club can't get in good shape in its home town in three weeks' time.

It might not be quite as sharp the first week or two, but it will be better off from July on.

Baseball's main problem this next season isn't going to be a matter of training.

It is going to be a matter of getting enough ballplayers to round up a squad.

If this part of the problem can be handled, it is more than probable that both pennant races will be closer and better.

Year after year we've seen the American league pennant race over by early August.

This means two months of waste action so far as general interest in the pennant is concerned. It is like playing out the bye-holes in a golf match.

National league races have been closer, but for the last two seasons they have been strictly two-team contests.

This means that 13 out of the 16 big league clubs might as well be selling peanuts after July.

Closer Race

There is a chance under the new order that a greater number of teams will be better matched and that cities outside of New York, Brooklyn and St. Louis will have a chance to look at home clubs that are parked within reach of the top.

At least, some of these teams won't be 40 and 50 games away from the front.

The closeness of the race will bring a new interest to baseball—one that is needed.

PEAKING OF SPORTS

By Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

HIGH school athletics will continue for the duration and football, basketball, track and other sports will have their places in the 1943 picture.

Such is the consensus of high school athletic association officials, who feel that their sports program will be emphasized, rather than de-emphasized during the coming months.

H. V. Porter, executive secretary of the National Federation of State High School Athletic associations, summed matters up neatly when he said:

"The consensus is that the draft of 18-year-olds will have little effect on prep sports since the average age of high school athletes is 17. Transportation, of course, will be the problem, but schools plan schedules close to home, placing emphasis on interscholastic sports that build physical fitness, offer competitive action and lift the morale of the local community."

Members of the high school athletic association aren't talking through their collective hats. Surveys conducted by Porter's office show that high schools in 40 states will strengthen their '43 programs.

Changing Outlook

Only last fall many school officials were straddling the fence, uncertain as to the future of their athletics. As a result, about 5 per cent of the schools dropped 11-man football and about 15 per cent abandoned six-man football.

Now the officials are almost unanimous in the belief that it is their patriotic duty to carry on.

It is also a matter of record that high school athletic staffs have been reduced about 25 per cent since the start of the war. In 1942 travel was reduced about 35 per cent, with a further reduction certain. High school squads used railroads, busses or common carriers in considerably less than half of their trips. Privately owned automobiles carried the teams in more than 62 per cent of the trips.

Recent actions on the part of various community school boards and college administrative bodies abandoning athletics have not daunted the young men who are determined to compete in their favorite sports until called for military service.

An official of the Michigan High School Athletic association recently pointed out that if schools were going to give up high school basketball and other sports then outside organizations would gladly step in and promote tournaments, games and meets.

Outside Help

In commenting on this statement, Major John L. Griffith, Big Ten commissioner, added:

"... if the high school men do not find ways of transporting players within reason, we may expect that the representatives of other organizations, who would gladly have the honor of promoting athletics for the high school boys, will see that the teams are moved from place to place."

Major Griffith was right. Civic clubs and interested business men of the smaller towns would see to it that the boys are provided necessary transportation facilities.

A factual story is told of one university south of the Mason-Dixon line. The powers that be decided to drop intercollegiate athletics. In the face of that obstacle the school's athletes went out and rounded up their own competition. The students are making up their own schedules and arranging all details. A conference in a nearby state agreed to help the boys out by scheduling them.

Although this happened in a college, the determination to take part in athletics is not confined to any of the younger age groups. High school athletics are as enthusiastic as are their collegiate contemporaries. Usually more so.

Sports History

That youth will find some means of serving itself is proved by the history of American intercollegiate athletics. Veteran observers will recall that it wasn't so long ago that students launched the collegiate athletic program because of the desire to engage other schools in competition. Although student management eventually became too ambitious and resulted in unethical practices and consequent regulatory faculty control, it was nonetheless the vigorous desire of the student athlete to meet outside opposition which gave the present day program its start.

The average small town sports enthusiast can remember when his local high school had no athletic coach and very little equipment. Those things usually were added when enough boys decided they wanted to have a team—football or basketball in most instances. If that determination continued and the boys proved their interest was genuine and lasting, school officials usually proved equal to the occasion.

Those small towns who overcame financial handicaps have contributed much to the American sports program.

JESUS HEALS A MAN BORN BLIND

LESSON TEXT—John 9:18-38.
GOLDEN TEXT—"One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see."—John 9:25.

The love of Christ is seen in its full beauty against the background of man's hatred and unbelief. Last week we saw Him coming away from the stones with which his enemies sought to kill him. As He passed by He had the time and the compassion to stop and help a man who had been born blind. His disciples, afflicted in some degree with the speculative tendencies of their time, saw in this blighted life only an illustration of a theological theory about sin.

But Jesus, by a loving and gracious act, stirred in the heart of the man that faith which caused him to obey—to go, to wash, and to see (v. 7). The enemies of Christ were not willing to believe even what they now saw to be true. Their stubborn unbelief shut the door to blessing for them, but the blind man received three things by faith:

I. Healing (vv. 18-23).

The argument with the man's parents hinged on one point—he had been healed of his blindness. The parents were unwilling to risk communication by discussing the matter, but they did know that he had been blind and now could see. That was clear.

An experience like that is impossible to deny. The healing of the soul of man in regeneration is also a stubborn fact which deniers of God's Word and God's grace are unable to meet and overcome. The one who was blind and now could see had no questions about the deity of Christ and His saving power. What is more, he was not afraid to testify. He could "speak for himself" (v. 21).

Note the difference between the three classes here: Blind and stubborn unbelief (v. 18), faith too fearful to speak (v. 22), and the assured faith of the one healed. That is our next point.

II. Assurance (vv. 24-34).

The appeal of the Jews in verse 24 based on their statement: "We know that this man is a sinner," reminds us that there is no knowledge so absolute (and so absolutely wrong) as that of ignorance backed by self-conceit.

They said they knew, but did not. The man had complete assurance by faith and by experience. He did not argue (v. 24), he simply restated his healing. "I was blind—now I see." When they evaded that reply (for they dared not meet it), he thrust deep with the convicting fact that God does not perform His miracles in response to the prayers of a wicked man. That was too much for them, and they cast him out.

Even as the stupidity and stubborn willful unbelief of our Lord's enemies grew step by step, so also did the healed man's assurance grow as he testified. First he called the Lord "a man called Jesus" (v. 11); then "a prophet" (v. 17), and then at last, "the Son of God" (vv. 35-38).

Standing true to Christ and speaking for Him means growth in faith, in knowledge and in grace. It may mean persecution and even exclusion, but remember that when the man was cast out by the haters of Christ, he met Christ. "His excommunication was a promotion. He went from the synagogue to the Saviour" (Scroggie). And that is our third point.

III. Fellowship (vv. 35-38).

He did not know Jesus. He had heard His voice, but he was blind then and had not seen Him. He probably did not know where to find Him. Then, too, he was now an outcast under the disfavor of the authorities, and even his friends would fear to be seen with him.

But Jesus sought him. Ah, that's the glorious difference between our Lord and those who look at the outward appearance of things. He went to find the man who now needed fellowship, instruction and encouragement.

He had sought the man out to heal him, now He sought him again to help him spiritually. We need to learn of our Lord that we are not to wait until the sin and suffering of men force themselves upon our attention and force us to do something. We are to go out into the highways and the hedges and urge sinners to come to Christ. We have failed in this. We have built churches and expected the people to come, instead of going where the people are, and bringing them the gospel. The war is teaching us some lessons in that connection, but we are none too quick to learn and to act.

There is a beautiful touch in verse 37. Dr. McLaren points out that when speaking to the woman of Samaria, Jesus said: "I that speak unto thee am he," but to the man who had just begun to see He said: "Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that speaketh to thee." The Christ who gave sight, now gives Himself to be seen.

Stationary Clouds

Clouds sometimes remain stationary for such long periods that they are given individual names. One example is a large, low formation that appears over the Rock of Gibraltar and does not move for as long as 12 days.

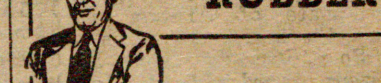

Because it is created by moist winds from the eastern Mediterranean, it is known as "The Levant."

If you're concerned about what sort of gift to send a friend or relative in one of Uncle Sam's branches of the services, your worries are over. If he smokes a pipe or rolls his own, the answer is a pound of tobacco. Numerous surveys made among soldiers, sailors, marines, and Coast Guardsmen show that tobacco ranks first on his gift list. Local tobacco dealers are featuring Prince Albert in the pound can for service men. Prince Albert, the world's largest-selling smoking tobacco, is a big favorite among many men in the service.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Reclaimed rubber is the product resulting from the processing of scrap rubber. It is prepared from used rubber articles that are cleaned, purified and made plastic for re-use in rubber manufacturing.

Crude rubber in 1899 was selling at $2,200 a ton. At the 1925 high was selling at $2,755.20 per long ton.

Engineers have designed the tires for one of the army's jeeps to resemble the camel's tread, nature's provision for support on shifting sand.

A commercial user of tires reported that an Ameripol synthetic rubber tire used on a light truck returned over 35,300 miles before it was re-capped. This tire, with 51 others, was placed in test service early in 1941.

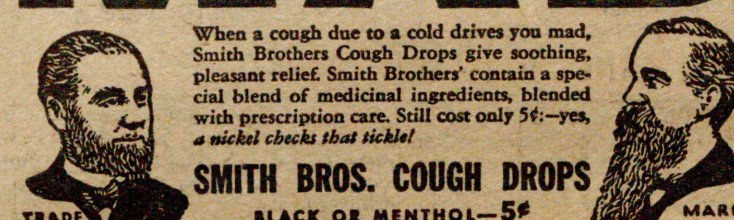

A 35,000-ton battleship required 168,000 pounds of rubber.

Don't Wait for A Bomb!

In England 2,750,000 Homes Have Been Bombed; 2,500,000 Have Been Repaired

Protect Your Property with Low Cost "War Damage Insurance" NOW!

IS MY PROPERTY LIABLE TO WAR DAMAGE?

Of course; in total war everything of use is a military objective. No one can truly estimate the chance of damage to your property. But remember: Chicago area is about the same bomber-distance from Tokyo as is San Diego, from Berlin as is Miami.

WILL MY NORMAL INSURANCE PAY FOR WAR DAMAGE?

No; standard fire and extended coverage policies apply only to normal hazards.

HOW CAN I PROTECT MYSELF AGAINST LOSS FROM ENEMY ATTACK?

Through War Damage Insurance which applies to loss from enemy attack, including action of our own forces resisting attack.

WHO PROVIDES WAR DAMAGE INS.?

The many private firms, providing normal property insurance, in cooperation with the War Damage Corporation.

CAN I THUS PROTECT PROPERTY OTHER THAN MY HOUSE?

Yes, virtually all household or business property can and should be insured against War Damage. This includes automobiles.

WHEN MUST PREMIUM BE PAID?

Full amount of premium must accompany application which may be secured from our office.

WHEN DOES WAR DAMAGE INSURANCE TAKE EFFECT?

When approved by firm issuing the policy. It protects only against future raids, not past. You are urged to share this national protection today.

YOUR HOME IS A WAR TARGET

Your home and most of what it contains are important to the war effort. Through a bombsight your real and personal property is a war target. And it is about the same bomber-distance from Berlin as is Miami, from Tokyo as is San Diego. It might be damaged.

WHO WILL PAY FOR ITS DAMAGE?

Standard fire and extended coverage policies do NOT protect you against war damage. Protection against such hazard, provided solely by a private firm, would require inestimable reserves. For this reason and because such damage is a national loss, arrangements have been made to provide national protection using national reserves.

WAR DAMAGE INSURANCE

This specifically protects your property against loss from enemy or our own forces in actual combat. The policy is issued by regular recognized property-insuring firms in co-operation with the War Damage Corporation. It is the nation's answer to the nation's need, and yours.

IS $100.00 WORTH A DIME?

For private homes and contents you pay only ten cents a year per $100 of insurance against war damage. The minimum premium is but three dollars. Rates for other classes of property are on file in our office.
